

“Being a man in a relationship today”.

(Training evening exclusively reserved for men)

Our world is changing, and so are its marital issues.

What seemed certain yesterday is less certain today, especially in couple relationships; particularly in the positioning of women and their development; in particular our positioning of a man in front of these women.

As men, we often grew up in families in which role models assigned with certainty such a role to the man, such a position in front of the woman; and this since generations and generations.

Today these certainties are shattered in the face of women who assert themselves, assume themselves... and seem wanting “one thing and its opposite”.

Faced with these ambivalences, we are a bit lost as a man; not knowing how to behave; not knowing whether to be the bad guy lover, the good father to their children, the friend confidant; the one who tinkers at home or the one who seduces on his white horse.

To see clearly in these uncertainties, I offer you a training evening reserved exclusively to men during which we will evoke our present or past couples, our women current or past, their expectations, our desires, our questions and our fears in the face of these expectations and desires.

Different theoretical insights will structure this training.